15-second horizontal 16:9 1080p first-person gameplay recording of a competitive 5v5 tactical shooter in team elimination mode, captured straight from a PC screen. Modern next-gen competitive shooter graphics: bright, clean, readable daylight, crisp PBR materials, high frame rate, sharp image. Pure first-person view: the player's hands in purple tactical gloves hold an original assault rifle with a flashy custom skin of hot-pink and teal graffiti patterns, positioned in the lower right of the frame. Clean screen with the HUD turned off: the only on-screen element is a small green crosshair in the center. There is no minimap, no kill feed, no health, ammo or money counters, no timer and no banners. Snappy competitive movement with quick peeks, crouching, strafing and precise flicks. The whole video is one continuous round with no cinematic cuts.

Setting: a sunny Asian harbor market district at midday, an original competitive map. There are narrow alleys between stacked, faded red, blue and yellow shipping containers, sun-bleached concrete, stalls with colorful canvas tarps and hanging paper lanterns, food carts, wooden crates and fish barrels, metal stairs and catwalks, corrugated metal walls, an open harbor basin of deep blue-green water with moored wooden fishing boats and floating pontoons, cranes on the docks in the background, and colorful painted shop signs made of abstract shapes, not letters. Bright high sun, clear blue sky with a few clouds, hard crisp shadows, seagulls in the distance and sunlight glittering on the water.

[00:00–00:02] The player strafes out from behind a shipping container, flicks onto an enemy soldier at the alley entrance and drops him with a short burst. The enemy ragdolls onto the concrete.
[00:02–00:04] He sprints along the containers, wide-swings around a stack of crates and drops an enemy hiding behind them with a quick two-shot tap.
[00:04–00:06] He jiggle-peeks the corner of a market stall and lands a clean headshot on an enemy on the catwalk.
[00:06–00:08] He hops down from the pier onto a floating wooden pontoon at the edge of the harbor basin and casually reloads with a fast magazine swap while moving along the planks.
[00:08–00:10] He advances along the pontoons between moored wooden fishing boats and taps an enemy standing on a boat deck. The body ragdolls off the deck and drops into the water with a splash.
[00:10–00:11] He throws a smoke grenade ahead onto the dock. It bounces across the wooden planks, then pops, and thick grey smoke spreads over the pier in the sunlight.

[00:11–00:13] Two enemies push out of the smoke along the dock. He sprays and taps them down; bullet impacts kick up wood splinters from the planks and small splashes in the water. Both enemies ragdoll onto the dock.
[00:13–00:15] The round is won. Standing alone on the pontoon in the middle of the harbor, he glances down at the sunlit water lapping against the boards, then looks back up and inspects his rifle with a stylish flip animation.

Style: authentic competitive esports gameplay footage that looks like a real ranked match caught on stream, with confident, clean play. Readable action, stable first-person camera with natural view bob and recoil, sharp, high detail, bright saturated daylight colors. No real-world text, no words, no brand logos, no watermark, no IP characters or maps.

Audio: competitive shooter sound design, with punchy rifle bursts with echo off the containers, shell casings clinking on concrete and wood, footsteps on concrete and hollow wooden planks, bullet impacts on wood and metal with small water splashes, a smoke grenade hiss, a crisp magazine reload, seagulls, lapping water against the boats, distant harbor horns and a short round-win sting at the end. No dialogue.
