Ultra-realistic live-action, vertical 9:16, 15 seconds. Handheld documentary look, as if a passenger is filming on a phone. Daytime Seoul city bus, half full: a few standing passengers, and two empty blue fabric seats side by side on the left. A small black CCTV dome is fixed to the ceiling above the doors and is visible from the first shot. All signs and screens stay soft and unreadable.

Cast, identical in every shot:
WOMAN: Korean, mid-20s, shoulder-length black hair, white

T-shirt, light-blue jeans, black ankle boots, small black crossbody bag, pink phone.
MAN: Korean, about 40, buzz cut, grey zip-up jacket, black trousers, smug grin.

0-3s: Medium shot, already in motion. The man barges past the woman on purpose. Her pink phone flies from her hand and skids across the floor. He laughs at her. The CCTV dome is in frame above them.
3-5s: Close-up of the woman, one hand on the pole, staring at him without blinking. He steps in to barge her again.
5-9s: One unbroken side-on wide shot, no cuts, both full bodies in frame. He lunges at her shoulder; she steps aside, grabs his wrist with her right hand and pulls him forward on his own momentum; he tips over the backs of the two empty blue seats and lands flat across them, legs in the air. Behind them a passenger gasps and a schoolboy covers his mouth.
9-12s: The man lies across the two blue seats, half rising. The woman, calm, points up at the CCTV dome and says in Korean: "웃으세요. 지금 찍히고 있어요." He looks up at the dome and freezes mid-rise, mouth open.
12-15s: Lit close-up: she picks her pink phone up off the floor, adjusts her bag strap and walks toward the doors with a small satisfied smile, while behind her the man stays frozen across the seats.

Sound: bus engine hum, air-brake hiss, the phone clattering, one passenger gasp, her line clear, no music.
