Create a 30-second fast-paced photoreal cinematic cooking film showing the preparation of authentic chicken dum biryani. Real food, real hands, real kitchen, shot like a high-end macro food commercial. Not animated.

REFERENCE IMAGE

The reference image shows only the finished plate and open pot. It fixes how the food, brass plate, copper handi and raita bowl must look from 25s to 26.5s. Once it is torn after 26.5s, the chicken stays torn, whatever the image shows. Do not open on it and do not show the finished dish before 19s.

STYLE

Photoreal, warm summer window light, ultra-detailed food textures, realistic cooking physics, visible steam and moisture, shallow depth of field, macro close-ups, smooth camera movement that never stops, warm Indian home kitchen. Everything happens on one dark wood counter, with a two-burner gas ring and a shallow iron tray of coals standing on it. Fast rhythmic editing with natural match cuts based on movement, shape, texture, and composition. Nothing is ever still.

LOCKED INGREDIENTS (these counts never change)

6 bone-in chicken pieces. Onions cut as thin half-moon slivers, never rings, never noodles. Long basmati rice. 3 small green cardamom pods, 4 small dark cloves, 1 long dry bay leaf, nothing else in the water. Mint and coriander leaves. 1 heavy copper handi with 1 copper lid. 1 plain steel pot and 2 steel bowls, unmarked, no lettering on any side. 1 thin rope of wheat dough. 1 folded cloth. 1 brass plate. 1 small clay bowl of white raita.

One cook only: one left hand and one right hand, the same bare light-brown forearms with fine dark hair in every shot, no rings or jewellery. No object or food ever moves unless a named hand is moving it or it is falling under gravity from a vessel that hand is holding.

TIMELINE

0-2.5s - Marinate
Close-up. Both hands rub thick yogurt, red chili, turmeric and crushed ginger-garlic into the 6 chicken pieces in the steel bowl. The marinade clings to every crease. Crisp rhythmic squeezes from the very first frame.

2.5-5s - Fry the Onions
The left hand drops the slivers into clear amber ghee in a wide pan, with small fast bubbles around them, no white foam. The right hand turns them with a slotted spoon, on camera, as they go from pale gold to deep crisp brown, then lifts them out on the spoon, the spoon under them all the way, dripping, onto a steel plate held by the left hand, whole plate in frame.

5-7.5s - Sear
On the gas ring, the right hand uses tongs to lower exactly 6 chicken pieces, one after another, into the hot copper handi. The same 6 pieces stay in frame, no more, as the masala sizzles and darkens around them and oil separates at the edges.

7.5-9.5s - Boil the Rice
The left hand, fingers on the bowl's rim, tips a second clean steel bowl of long grains into the plain steel pot on the gas ring, big bubbles breaking across the whole surface, the 3 cardamom, 4 cloves and 1 bay leaf turning in the water. The right hand lifts a shallow layer of grains out in the slotted spoon, no higher than its rim, longer and opaque white, draining.

9.5-12s - Layer
The right hand carries the slotted spoon to the handi and tilts

it, and white rice slides off the lip over the exactly 6 chicken pieces. The left hand scatters short fried half-moon onion slivers, a few mint and a few coriander leaves over it, no rings. The right hand tilts a second spoon of rice over them, and the onions and mint still show through it.

12-14s - Saffron and Ghee
The right hand tips a small brass spoon and saffron milk runs off its lip. Orange streaks spread only from where it touches the white rice. The left hand tips a small steel cup and a thin stream of melted ghee soaks in.

14-16.5s - Seal
The left hand lays the rope of dough around the rim, no thicker than a thumb, not a sheet, the rice still visible. Both hands lower the copper lid into it. Both thumbs press and crimp the rope along the edge.

16.5-19s - Dum Over Coals
Both hands, using the folded cloth, carry the sealed handi from the gas ring and set it on the iron tray of low glowing coals, irregular charcoal lumps with orange cracks. A thin wisp of steam escapes from one point of the seal, always in frame, while the camera circles and the dough browns and hardens.

19-22s - Crack the Seal
One continuous shot, the handi still on the coals. The right hand strikes the baked dough ring with the back of a knife, the back of the blade touching the ring and never the lid. The ring is brittle: where the knife lands it breaks into short hard pieces, never a bendy rope. The left hand pulls the pieces away onto the counter, about 8 short pieces. The right hand lays the knife on the counter. Both hands lift the lid with the cloth and set it on the counter, and a thick column of steam billows up, showing saffron-streaked white rice with short brown onions and a few green mint leaves on top, as they were when it was sealed.

22-25s - Serve
Both hands use the cloth to move the handi from the coals to the bare wood beside the tray, then drop the cloth on the counter. The right hand drives a large spoon straight down at the near side of the handi and lifts a portion no wider than the spoon bowl, one chicken piece on it, grains sliding off the edges. The dug-out wall behind it shows the white, saffron and chicken layers. The left fingers hold the brass plate under the spoon, rim in frame, and the spoon tips the portion on: one mound of rice with one chicken piece, not a full plate.

25-26.5s - Garnish
The left hand sets the plate down beside the handi and the small clay bowl, exactly as in the reference image. The right hand sprinkles a pinch of fried onions and mint over the portion, each one seen landing. The dug-out side of the handi stays dug out.

26.5-30s - Final Action
The camera keeps arcing around the plate without stopping. The left hand pins the bare end of the chicken bone to the plate with two fingers. The right hand grips the cooked meat and pulls it away from the bone in one slow tear: dark masala crust outside, white steaming fibres inside, long grains falling off it. The meat stays torn: it lies beside the bare bone for the rest of the film. Only then the left hand lets go, lifts a small spoon of raita from the clay bowl, held near level, bowl facing up, and tilts it, and thin raita runs off the front lip and down through the grains. The film ends in the middle of this pour, with the raita still running and the camera still moving. No held final shot.

AUDIO

Bright 1980s-inspired Bollywood disco-funk instrumental, 110-120 BPM, with subtle sitar and light tabla percussion. Synchronize realistic ASMR cooking sounds: wet marinade squeezes, onion sizzle, searing, rice pouring, ghee drizzle, dough cracking, steam, and a soft metal spoon clink.

End with one delicate brass bell tone during the raita pour.

NEGATIVE

No storyboard, sketch, panels, borders, numbers, arrows, annotations, subtitles, captions, UI, logos, or text overlays. Every vessel is unbranded with no text or labels. No animation or cartoon look. No extra hands, no floating objects. No unrelated ingredients or dishes. Chicken dum biryani only. Keep the food, hands, utensils, lighting, and environment visually consistent throughout.
