Create a 30-second, vertical 9:16, native 720p ultra-realistic emotional live-action scene inside a rooftop restaurant in Seoul on a rainy evening.

MAP, one room: the entrance is behind her at the start, with warm restaurant light and a few seated diners out of focus. The rain-covered window wall is ahead of her. A glass exit door to the outside is beyond the diners, near the entrance. Full evening: dark sky, rain on every window. Warm practical light on faces from the room, cool city light only through the glass.

CAST: A young Korean woman in her early 20s, with long black hair, wearing a fitted pastel mint-green crop top that stays green under warm light, not pink, not white, blue denim shorts, white sneakers and a delicate silver necklace. Her boyfriend: matte charcoal short-sleeve button shirt, not navy, not brown. Another woman: dark red dress.

0-4s. Already moving. She walks in from the entrance towards camera, growing in frame, smiling, looking for him, turning her head screen-right.
4-8s. Close-up at three-quarter, face filling half the frame, eyes off the lens to screen-right on a point at the window. Her smile and her feet stop at 4.5 s. At 5.5 s her lips part. At 6.5 s one tear starts down her near cheek. Behind her only the warm room and diners.
8-11s. Her point of view, from where she stands: at the rain-covered window ahead, her boyfriend kissing the other woman. They break apart at 9 s and see her. The other woman turns to screen-left, chest, face and feet pointing that way, and walks out of frame to screen-left. She does not come back.
11-15s. She walks towards him, chest and face leading, camera moving back with her. Two-shot at the window, faces large, she on screen-left facing right, he on screen-right facing left. Through a trembling voice: "Why would you do this to me?"
15-19s. Close-up on him, face large, rain on the window behind him, warm spill on one cheek: he nervously tries to explain, hands half raised, eyes dropping. Cut to her close-up, eyes on his, whispering: "I trusted you."
19-21s. Two-shot. Her right hand comes up and slaps him once across the cheek, the contact sharp, his head turning with it. Natural skin, no blood.
21-24s. He holds his cheek with one hand, staring at her. She stands crying, her hand trembling at her side. She looks at him one final time and shakes her head twice.

24-27s. Cut to behind him at the window, facing the room. She turns away first, then walks towards the exit, back to camera, shrinking in frame, past the diners. He takes one step after her and stops.
27-30s. The camera stays inside. Through the glass exit door she pushes out into the rain, hair going wet, still walking. In the foreground he stands near the rainy window at the edge of frame, three-quarter from behind, facing the door, one hand slowly dropping from his cheek. The film ends with her still walking away in the rain and the rain still running down the glass.

STYLE: Photorealistic live-action, natural handheld camera, realistic skin texture, authentic tears, subtle facial expressions, warm restaurant lights contrasting with cool rainy city lights, shallow depth of field, 24fps.

AUDIO: Rain, restaurant ambience, footsteps, trembling dialogue and one sharp slap. No music or narration.

NEGATIVE: Fake tears, exaggerated acting, screaming, repeated violence, distorted faces, identity drift, changing outfits, subtitles, logos or watermark.
