Create a 30-second, vertical 9:16, native 720p ultra-realistic emotional live-action scene inside a rooftop restaurant in Seoul on a rainy evening.

MAP, one room, and everyone starts on the warm side of its glass: one wall is the window, and rain runs down the outside of the glass only, soft and out of focus, always behind people, never in front of a face. The opposite wall has the entrance, seated diners and a glass exit door. Full evening: near-black sky. Warm practical light on faces from the room, cool city light only through the glass.

CAST: A young Korean woman in her early 20s, with long black hair, wearing a fitted pastel mint-green crop top that stays green under warm light, not pink, not white, blue denim shorts, white sneakers and a delicate silver necklace. Her boyfriend: matte charcoal short-sleeve button shirt. Another woman: dark red dress.

0-4s. Already moving. She walks in from the entrance towards camera, growing in frame, smiling, looking for him, turning her head screen-right.
4-8s. Close-up, her face turned three-quarter to screen-right, filling half the frame, eyes on a point past the lens at screen-right. Her smile and her feet stop at 4.5 s. At 5.5 s her lips part. At 6.5 s her eyes fill. Behind her only the warm room and diners.
8-11s. Her point of view across the room: warm room light, faces clear, the pane behind them, her boyfriend in his charcoal short-sleeve shirt kissing the other woman. They break apart at 9 s and see her. The other woman turns to screen-left, chest, face and feet pointing that way, and walks out of frame to screen-left. She does not come back.
11-15s. One tear on her near cheek. She walks towards him, chest and face leading, camera moving back with her. Two-shot at the pane, only the two of them, faces large, she on screen-left facing right, he on screen-right facing left. Through a trembling voice: "Why would you do this to me?"
15-19s. Close-up on him, face large, turned to screen-left: he nervously tries to explain, hands half raised, eyes dropping. Cut to her close-up, face turned to screen-right, eyes on his, whispering: "I trusted you."
19-21s. Two-shot. Her right hand comes up and slaps him once across the cheek, the contact sharp. His head turns a quarter away and comes back. His feet and chest stay where they are, and she stays facing him. No blood.
21-24s. Tighter two-shot, each face large: he holds his cheek with one hand, staring at her. She is crying, and at 22 s and 23 s she turns her head a small no, eyes on him.

24-30s. One shot, no cut. Camera behind his shoulder at the window, facing the room, his head and charcoal shirt at frame-right, the room clear beside him. She turns away first, then walks towards the exit door, back to camera, shrinking in frame, past the diners. He takes one step after her and stops. At 28 s she pushes the glass door open with one hand and steps through into the rain onto a lit garden path between planters. His hand slowly drops from his cheek. The film ends with her still walking away in the rain.

STYLE: Photorealistic live-action, natural handheld camera, authentic tears, subtle facial expressions, shallow depth of field.

AUDIO: Rain, restaurant ambience, footsteps, trembling dialogue and one sharp slap. No music or narration.

NEGATIVE: Fake tears, exaggerated acting, screaming, repeated violence, changing outfits, subtitles, logos or watermark.
