Camera first, hard requirement: low camera at duckling eye level, ankle height to the goose, 35mm, moving on every beat and never locked off. Vertical 9:16.

MAP, never mirrored: a narrow dirt path runs from the bottom-right of frame away to the top-right. A chilli bush and then a lake fill the left side, and the lake's edge is only a few duck-lengths behind PIP. PIP stands on the left of the path by the bush, body turned to screen-right. GUS comes down the path from the top-right, growing in frame as he walks head first with chest and feet pointing his way, stops at PIP's right side and faces screen-left, looking down at him. The lake is always behind PIP on screen-left, and no water lies right of the path. Anyone who travels turns first, and then chest, face and feet point the way they go. Nobody walks backwards.

Look: premium feature-film 3D animation for all ages, bright comedy, appealing stylised proportions, golden-hour light, one consistent light state. No dialogue, no text, no logos.

Cast: image 1 is PIP, a grapefruit-sized charcoal-grey duckling with a messy black tuft, cream face, big glossy brown eyes, thick dark eyebrows, small orange bill. Image 2 is GUS, a tall white goose three times PIP's height, long S-curve neck, droopy half-lidded eyes, bushy black eyebrows, long orange bill.

Props: the bush carries a few small curved glossy red chillies, each no longer than PIP's head, hanging from a green stem on a branch, pointed tip down, one at PIP's bill height. No chilli is ever on the ground. PIP has no hands: the branch holds a chilli until he plucks it, and after that he holds it only in his bill, by the green stem.

COLOUR STATES, stated per beat: GREY means true sheet colours. RED means the head is salmon-red.

0:00 to 0:02.5. PIP GREY in the first frame, already eating. Medium close-up, his face a third of the frame height, facing screen-right, a small chilli hanging beside his bill from its green stem on a branch arching over him. He nips off the pointed tip, chews, and nips again, working up from the tip, and the bare green stem stays on the branch. PIP turns RED as he chews: the red climbs from neck to crown like a thermometer. His cheeks puff out, and two jets of steam shoot from the sides of his head and rock his whole body, feet planted.

0:02.5 to 0:04. PIP RED. Slow footsteps. His eyes slide up to the top-right. Cut to his POV, full-frame long-lens compression, no circular mask, no vignette, no binoculars: far up the path GUS strolls head first towards camera, growing in frame with each step, the amber evening sky behind him.

0:04 to 0:06.5. PIP RED. One continuous shot, no edit, same medium close-up. He shuts his eyes and forces out one long exhale. The red drains down from his crown like a blind being lowered and his cheeks shrink with a small squeak. PIP GREY. His eyes open on the middle distance, blank.

0:06.5 to 0:09.5. One continuous shot, no edit. PIP GREY, whole body and branch near the middle of the picture, GUS's huge orange feet standing beside him, amber sky behind. PIP stretches up to the branch, closes his bill on one chilli's green stem, pulls it free with a small snap, and holds it up towards GUS by the stem, pointed tip towards GUS, his eyes on the middle distance. One small eyebrow raise.

0:09.5 to 0:12. PIP GREY, GUS GREY. GUS's neck comes down in one slow arc until his bored face is just above PIP. He nips the chilli by its pointed tip. PIP lets go of the stem. GUS tosses it back and crunches it, stem and all, and the music stops dead. For the last second he looks down at PIP, chewing slowly, one eyebrow up, neck still white, and PIP blinks once.

0:12 to 0:15. Payoff, close-up on GUS, face filling a third of the frame, eyes on PIP at screen-left. GUS only changes: the red rises up his neck from the base like a thermometer and reaches his head. GUS RED. His droopy eyes snap wide, his cheeks puff out, his bill opens, and a thin column of steam erupts straight up from the open bill. His whole head stays sharp and well inside the picture.

0:15 to 0:18. One continuous shot, low and side-on. PIP GREY, large in the foreground at the bottom-left, body towards camera, eyes on the middle distance, his face a third of the frame height. GUS RED, cheeks still puffed, behind him and at least a third of the frame height: GUS snaps his head level, chest and feet pointing screen-left, then runs that way right to left behind PIP, flapping, two big strides in under a second, clear of the bush, and belly-flops into the near edge of the lake a few duck-lengths behind PIP. The water erupts in a tall splash and a hiss of steam. Clear lake water rains down on PIP in big drops; the path stays dry dirt. PIP's face does not change. Then one small puff of steam escapes the side of his head, and his body stays still. The film ends with the spray still falling and GUS still splashing. No held final shot.

Sound: orchestral comedy score that stops dead for the chew, one small ding when the red reaches the top of each head, cartoon crunch, steam jets, footsteps, the splash. No speech.
