Photoreal live-action drama, vertical 9:16, 15 seconds, warm restaurant lighting, shallow depth of field.
YOUNG CHEF: fictional adult woman, 24, round face, black hair in a low bun under a white chef's cap, white chef's jacket, does not resemble any actor.
HEAD CHEF: fictional man, 55, grey moustache, tall white toque, white double-breasted jacket.
GUEST: fictional older man, 70, silver hair, navy suit, seated at a table near the kitchen pass.

0-3s, close: the young chef in the white cap places one small seared scallop dish with a green herb sauce on a white plate at the pass.
3-6s, medium: the head chef in the tall toque tastes it, frowns, pushes the plate back and says, "Again." The young chef's eyes fill with tears.
6-11s, ONE unbroken shot, the camera follows the plate without cutting: a waiter carries the same plate past the pass to the silver-haired guest in the navy suit. He takes one bite, stops, closes his eyes, then stands up and starts clapping slowly. Other diners turn and clap too.
CUT TO 11-13s, close-up: the head chef in the tall toque, frozen, then quietly picks a crumb from the plate's edge and tastes it again.
CUT TO 13-15s, close-up: the young chef in the white cap wipes one tear and smiles. The guest's voice off screen: "Whoever made this. Come here." Hold on her smile.
Sound: sizzling pans, plate on steel, kitchen bustle, slow clapping building. Lines in natural English. No music, no on-screen text.
