Camera first: Shot 1 is a side-on fighting game camera that tracks left and right with the fighters, then becomes one slow physical pull-back. Vertical 9:16.

STYLE: polished stylised 3D game cinematic, rich materials, bold rim light, the same character models in the game and in the room. No text, no logos, no interface of any kind.

CAST, both adults, original characters, faces fully visible, no masks. FROST, left: tall, pale blue armour plates over a dark grey suit, short silver hair, calm. EMBER, right: broad, dark orange and black armour plates, short black hair, a small beard, proud.

0:00 to 0:03. Already moving in the first frame. A rooftop arena at night, wet stone floor, neon city behind. EMBER lunges from screen-right, fist pulled back. FROST sidesteps, and EMBER's punch hits empty air.

0:03 to 0:06. One continuous shot, no edit. FROST thrusts both palms forward and a burst of pale blue frost flies across the gap and hits EMBER's orange chest plate. White frost spreads across the plate. EMBER skids back two steps on the wet stone and drops to one knee, beaten.

0:06 to 0:10. One continuous shot, no edit. The camera pulls straight back. The arena image shrinks into a large television screen in a dim living room, the fight still playing on it. The camera keeps moving back and settles at the end of a couch, a three-quarter view from the side: FROST and EMBER sitting on it in the same armour, the frost still white on EMBER's chest plate, each holding a plain black game controller, the television in front of them.

0:10 to 0:15. Cut to a low two-shot from beside the television, facing the couch, both faces a third of the frame height, the screen's blue glow on them. EMBER cracks open a soda can with a hiss. Leaning back, eyes on the screen, he says, calm and a little offended: "I let you win." FROST's eyes slide to EMBER, never the lens, and one corner of his mouth lifts. The film ends on that smirk, EMBER sipping.

Sound: fighting game music and hit sounds that turn small and tinny as the room appears, frost crackle, can hiss. One line of English dialogue, lip-synced, EMBER only. FROST is silent.
