Camera first: medium-wide shots framing both faces, 35mm, handheld, moving with each trick. Vertical 9:16.

STYLE: stylised 3D animation, hyperreal pop colour, squash-and-stretch, big readable faces. No text, no logos.

CAST. GIRL, about 7, round face, huge eyes, golden-blond ponytail, a pink striped dress. VENDOR, a tall man with a curled moustache, crimson vest, tilted cap, holding a long brass paddle with a cone of pink ice cream sitting in a small cup at its tip.

SET: a sunlit stone courtyard in a hillside town, a brass ice cream cart with a small bell, flower archways, a few amused onlookers behind.

MAP: the cart and VENDOR on screen-left, the GIRL on screen-right, facing each other. The cone stays on the paddle's tip until the end.

0:00 to 0:03. Already moving. VENDOR holds the paddle out low; the GIRL grabs for the cone. He flips the paddle over and her hand closes on the empty underside. The cone is now on top. Onlookers laugh.

0:03 to 0:06. He swings the paddle back down to her. She jumps for it. He lifts it high over her head, the cone still on the tip.

0:06 to 0:09. He rings the cart's bell with his free hand. Her eyes go to the bell, and the paddle and cone sweep away behind his back. She looks back, the cone is gone, and her mouth drops.

0:09 to 0:12. One continuous shot, no edit. The GIRL turns away from him to face camera, arms folded, chin up. Behind her shoulder, VENDOR's grin falls. He leans round her, holding the paddle out low and still in front of her.

0:12 to 0:15. Close on the GIRL, face a third of the frame height. Without looking at him, she lifts the cone off the paddle with both hands and holds it up, a small smug smile, eyes half closed. Behind her, VENDOR blinks at his empty paddle. The film ends mid-smile.

Sound: playful plucked strings and accordion, whooshes on each trick, the brass bell, onlooker laughs, then a happy little chime on her smile. No dialogue.
