Camera first: straight-down overhead view for the whole film, looking at one vertical notebook page that fills the 9:16 frame. The camera only glides and pushes in over the paper.

LOOK: aged yellow lined notebook paper, clear blue horizontal ruled lines and one red margin line down the left side, visible in every frame, fine paper grain. All figures are hand-drawn 2D on this paper in pencil and ink. Flat on the paper throughout. No text.

PAGE LAYOUT: the red army of stick figures at the top of the page faces the centre of the page, the blue army at the bottom faces the centre too, an empty band of ruled paper between them. Each army has one GENERAL on a horse at its front.

DRAWING STAGES, each one replacing the last only when an impact hits:
STAGE 1 crude: stick limbs and circle heads in coloured pencil.
STAGE 2 inked: firm ink lines, simple helmets and spears.
STAGE 3 legendary: densely inked illustrated warriors, armour, banners, cross-hatched shadows, flowing capes, still flat on ruled paper.

0:00 to 0:03. STAGE 1, already moving in the first frame. Both stick armies sprint towards each other down the page, tiny legs scribbling, pencil arrows arcing over the ruled lines.

0:03 to 0:06. The front lines meet in the middle of the page. On that impact, every figure snaps to STAGE 2: ink lines, helmets, spears.

0:06 to 0:09. The camera pushes in towards the two GENERALS meeting in the middle. On their first clash, everything snaps to STAGE 3: armour, horses with muscle, banners, ink dust, capes.

0:09 to 0:12. One continuous shot, no edit. The two GENERALS swing and their blades meet. A ring of ink lines bursts out, and the camera pulls back to show the whole page as the ring spreads to its edges. As the ring passes, every warrior and horse snaps back to STAGE 1, crude stick figures and scribbled loops, still on the ruled paper.

0:12 to 0:15. The camera pushes back in. The two stick GENERALS hop off their scribbled horses and stand face to face, red in the upper half of the frame, blue in the lower half, their circle heads each about a fifth of the frame height, simple dot eyes. Their dot eyes go wide at each other. The red one shrugs. The blue one holds out a stick hand, and they shake. The film ends mid-handshake, pencil dust drifting across the lines.

Sound: pencil scratching and paper rustle that grow into a full orchestral battle score, sword clangs, a big ink whoosh, then quiet paper sounds and one small pencil tap for the handshake.
