Camera first: medium shots at seated eye height, 35mm, gentle handheld, the camera beside the two upright arcade cabinets at a three-quarter angle, seeing both faces and both control panels. The picture is always one single full frame. Vertical 9:16.

STYLE: polished stylised 3D animated comedy, warm neon arcade light, big readable faces. No text and no logos anywhere. Both cabinet screens are turned away from the camera; we only see their coloured light on the faces.

CAST, both original characters. UNIT-7, screen-left: a slim adult-sized white humanoid robot with glossy plates, a round head with a dark glass visor and two glowing blue oval eyes behind it, a small speaker grille where a mouth would be, chin up, smug. NANI, screen-right: a small grandmother in her seventies, grey hair in a bun, round gold glasses, a maroon cardigan over a cream sari, calm.

SET: a busy arcade at night. Two upright cabinets side by side, each with a black joystick and three round buttons on the control panel, one of them big and red. Two round stools.

0:00 to 0:03. Already moving in the first frame. Both work their joysticks fast, screen light flickering on their faces. UNIT-7, eyes fixed ahead, his eyes pulsing with each word: "Probability of my defeat: zero."

0:03 to 0:06. One continuous shot, no edit. Close on NANI's control panel, her whole hand and wrist in view, the big red button in the middle of the frame. She slowly presses the big red button once with one finger.

0:06 to 0:09. Back on the two of them. A red flash lights UNIT-7's visor from his screen. His two blue oval eyes squash into two flat lines. NANI keeps looking at her screen.

0:09 to 0:12. One continuous shot, no edit. UNIT-7 stands up and stomps off to screen-left with stiff angry steps, his stool spinning behind him.

0:12 to 0:15. Close on NANI, three-quarter view, her face a third of the frame height, eyes towards screen-left where he went, not the lens. She calls after him, sweetly: "Same time tomorrow?" She turns back to her screen and smiles. The film ends on her small smile.

Sound: arcade bleeps, joystick clacks, one loud defeat buzz, a stool squeak, heavy robot footsteps. Two lines of English dialogue. UNIT-7 speaks through his speaker grille, a flat synthetic voice. NANI's line is lip-synced. No music.
