Camera first: medium shots, 35mm, gentle handheld; the treehouse shots at monkey eye height, the street shots from the pavement looking up. The picture is always one single full frame. Vertical 9:16.

STYLE: polished stylised 3D animated comedy, warm afternoon light through leaves, big readable faces. No text and no logos anywhere.

CAST: a family of original cartoon monkeys with brown fur and pale faces: DAD (big, grey at the temples), MUM (slim, a flower behind one ear) and BABY (tiny, big eyes), who holds a small plain grey wireless controller. RIDER: a young man in a plain teal jacket, an open-face white helmet and a plain teal insulated box on the back of his scooter.

SET: a wooden treehouse on a thick branch of a big tree above a quiet street. A small old television sits on the plank floor with its screen facing the monkeys, away from us. The plank floor has an open edge over the street.

0:00 to 0:03. Already moving in the first frame. In the treehouse, BABY jabs the controller buttons, tongue out, DAD and MUM leaning in to watch the television.

0:03 to 0:06. Down on the street, RIDER pulls his scooter up under the tree, stops, and looks up into the branches.

0:06 to 0:09. In the treehouse, MUM spots RIDER below and puts one finger to her lips. BABY leans over the plank edge to look down, eyes huge.

0:09 to 0:12. One continuous shot, no edit. Close on BABY's hands and the controller, the plank edge right below. Leaning out, BABY's grip loosens: the controller slips from its hands, tips over the plank edge and drops.

0:12 to 0:15. One continuous shot. From the pavement: RIDER, his face a third of the frame height, looking up. The controller lands on top of his helmet with a hollow clack and he catches it in both hands. He looks up at the tree: "Player two?" The film ends on his face.

Sound: game bleeps, leaves rustling, a scooter engine stopping, a hollow clack on the helmet. One line of English dialogue, lip-synced, RIDER only. No music.
