Camera first: one unbroken wide tracking take from 0:00 to 0:12 that follows the runner, a drone-like move at the dam face, then one cut to a medium shot on the ground for 0:12 to 0:15. The picture is always one single full frame. Vertical 9:16.

STYLE: cinematic photoreal action, bright midday sun, mist and rainbows in the spray, crisp detail. Plainly impossible movement, superhero physics. No text and no logos anywhere.

CAST: RUNNER, an athletic adult man, short black hair, a plain black running vest and black shorts, plain white running shoes. GUARD, a heavy middle-aged man in a plain blue uniform shirt and cap, asleep on a white plastic chair, cap pulled over his eyes.

SET: the base of a huge curved concrete dam. A wide spillway of white water pours down its middle. A small guard booth and the GUARD's chair sit on the wet concrete apron at the bottom, visible from the first frame.

MAP: the dam fills the back of the frame. The spillway is in the middle. The GUARD sits bottom screen-right at the foot of the spillway, always there.

0:00 to 0:03. Already moving in the first frame. RUNNER sprints across the concrete apron towards the dam wall, the sleeping GUARD small in the bottom right.

0:03 to 0:06. He reaches the wall and keeps running straight up the curved concrete face beside the spillway, the camera rising with him, spray streaming past.

0:06 to 0:09. At the top edge, directly above the spillway, he leaps into a high backflip against the blue sky, spray and a rainbow below him.

0:09 to 0:12. He lands feet first on the sheet of water pouring down the spillway and slides down it standing, arms out, like on a waterslide, spray fanning behind him.

0:12 to 0:15. Medium on the ground. The GUARD's face is in the foreground, a third of the frame height. A few steps behind the chair, sharp in the background, the RUNNER skids to a stop on the wet concrete, frozen in a crouched landing pose. Then the GUARD lifts the cap with one finger and one eye opens and looks towards the RUNNER. The film ends on that one open eye.

Sound: roaring water, fast footsteps on concrete, a whoosh at the flip, a long splash slide, the GUARD's snore that stops dead. No dialogue. No music.
